Walid is Civil and Structural Engineer turned Lawyer who focuses his legal practice on client representation in construction disputes and commercial litigation. Walid graduated from UCF with a bachelor's in civil engineering. He practiced engineering as a structural and land development designer before he attended and graduated from Stetson College of Law. Walid has worked with engineers, architects, contractors, subcontractors, and owners on several construction projects around Florida which led him to develop a unique set of skills that help him with his practice of law.

Walid spends his free time traveling around the nation and the world, experiencing new food and cultures, and spending time with his family and friends. Walid has been to 15 states and 31 countries and is fluent in Arabic and English.
